

REAL ESTATE'S VALUE MAY BE SHOWN TO-DAY

Inventory Kept Secret in Connecticut Part of Move for Exemption Here.

The inventory of the estate of Norman

The inventory of the estate of Norman B. Ream, capitalist, which has been filed in Windham county, Connecticut, and which had been taken from public gaze by counsel for the Ream estate with the assistance of Probate Judge Munyan of Windham county, may become known to-day as the result of an application filed here yesterday in the Surrogate's court.

The application, which was made by Norman B. Ream, a son, and Otto T. Barnard, president of the New York Trust Company, executors under the will, asks that the estate be exempted from a transfer tax in New York State on the ground that Mr. Ream had been a resident of Thompson, Windham county, Connecticut, for seven years before his death.

The inventory of the two previous wills which became void when Mr. Ream executed a later document, were not filed in the Surrogate's court with the petition for exemption, although made a part of the proceeding. It was said.

...to call for them today. It is believed that the estate has been surrounded by mystery because of the efforts to keep its details secret.

When he came East, and in the following year became a resident of Thompson, Conn. He immediately enrolled as a resident of Thompson State established three months later. His family consisted of personal effects in his possession except here and for the accommodation during his stay. His only property in the State was a small apartment house in Chicago from $71 to $100 per month.

It was said yesterday in behalf of William W. Wingate, special counsel for the State Hospital Trusts, that the affidavits indicate strongly that Mr. Wingate was a resident of Connecticut, Mr. Wingate will appear to-day and ask Surgeon-General Colahan to make such disposition of the application as the facts warrant.
